Still, overall it was an upbeat assessment, with Sotheby's reporting real estate markets across Fairfield County are performing well, with transaction volume topping last year's figures amid good foot traffic.

"Buyers were out in force during our spring market this year," said Patty McManus, a broker in the Danbury office of Sotheby's. "The momentum has continued into our summer market, which is a huge departure from the past few years."

Sotheby's reported 3,450 homes sold in Fairfield County and the adjacent markets of Oxford and Southbury, with Sotheby's Market Watch report for the second quarter not including data for Bridgeport, the largest city in Connecticut. Berkshire Hathaway Home Services-New England Properties reported 97 single-family homes sold in Bridgeport in the second quarter, off 2 percent from a year earlier.

Sotheby's calculated a 16 percent increase in home sales in Litchfield County, with Canaan's 180 percent increase tops among the some 140 municipalities included in the report covering Connecticut, Westchester County, N.Y., and western Massachusetts.

Sales were up 9 percent in northern Westchester County.

"July already looks to be part of an extended spring market," stated Candace Adams, an Easton resident who is CEO of Berkshire Hathaway Home Services-New England Properties, in her own firm's second-quarter report. "Pending sales are up ... which points to an active summer and fall."

Sotheby's dubbed the first half of 2015 "a tale of two price categories" with entry price homes seeing strong growth despite wintry weather in February and March that agents had blamed for a sluggish overall start to the year. As things picked up in May, however, middle- and upper-income homes improved.

Buyers have emerged this year as consumer confidence increases, as Millennials move out of urban centers as their children reach school age, and as the Federal Reserve signals higher interest rates on the horizon.

If interest rates are heading up, as the Federal Reserve System has signaled, banks are increasingly competing to win business with Sotheby's reporting "financing has definitely loosened."

"Despite the continually improving market conditions, buyers remain exceptionally discriminating, in large part because they can afford to be," Sotheby's wrote in its report. "The emotional component — buyers feeling they have to have a certain house — has been replaced with a more pragmatic approach as they decide whether a house meets their needs at an equitable price. With less emphasis on emotion, buyers are not afraid to move on if they cannot reach an agreement with a seller."
